

Muslim social networking website launched

Apr 14 2008

A Muslim equivalent of Yahoo, Facebook and Youtube has been recognised as one of Europe's best tech start-ups by an American technology magazine.

Muxlim.com has been selected as one of Europe's most successful new businesses by California-based Red Herring - a media company dedicated to business innovation and technology.

Muxlim.com was launched in 2006 by two Scandinavian-based entrepreneurs, with the objective of creating the most popular Muslim social media website in the world. Within a year Muxlim.com attracted more than a million users from 190 countries across the globe.

Founder and chief executive Mohamed El-Fataty said: "The recognition of Muxlim.com as one of Europe's most innovative and successful companies is a great honour for both the company and the Muslim community.

"Our objective was to create an online environment where Muslims and nonMuslims can enjoy social media in a safe and friendly atmosphere."

He added: "We know that a huge number of internet users, in particular parents, want access to an online experience that does not expose people to vulgarity, offensive content and adult material.

"At the same time it's vital that social media is engaging, user-friendly and fun. Muxlim.com achieves all this, and we have attracted a vibrant and friendly community with a welcoming demeanour and a sense of humour.

"As all social media websites, we are continuously improving the services available to our users, and recently launched Muxlim TV - which allows our users to create their own online TV channel by uploading and sharing their videos.

"Our community has been very active in helping the moderation team ensure that uploaded content is appropriate for users of all ages.

"And within the next few weeks we will introduce My Muxlim, the first Muslim personalised-homepage and social networking service based on the Google OpenSocial platform, which allows users to add thousands of apps from different sites to their Muxlim.com profiles.

"In a few months, Muxlim Pal, will also be the first Muslim alternative to the likes of Second Life and other virtual worlds."

Imran Akram, chairman of Innovate Arts and founder of the Muslim Writers Awards, said: "I welcome the availability of a safe and ethically-minded channel like Muxlim.com, as it provides users and parents with peace of mind that Muslim families can enjoy a complete online experience within a morally-centred environment.

"What makes this online community stand out is the creative and comedic usergenerated content on display.

"If you want to appeal to young users then it's vital that your output is funny and engaging.

"The Muxlim.com community has proven that it's more than possible to discuss serious social issues through humour, and this website is a great resource for Muslims and non-Muslims alike.
